What do they do?

C.R.O.W is an organization that specializes in the preservation and protection of wildlife. Their cause includes rescuing injured wild animal, nursing them back to health, and eventually releasing them back to their natural habitat or the best equivalent.

C.R.O.W believes in a "no cage agenda", in which wildlife should be left to flourish in its beautiful way, instead of being trapped in a cage such as at a zoo.

From small birds to large rhinos, which they have taken in at one point, C.R.O.W has dedicated themselves to serve the cause of protecting wildlife to the fullest extent

What is their impact on the community?

C.R.O.W is one of the largest wildlife rehabilitation NPO's in South Africa, and one of the only NSPCA accredited primate rehabilitation centre in Kwa-Zulu Natal, serving the community to ensure that their doors are open to take care of orphaned and injured wildlife. On their project story, they have a "No turn away policy", in which no animal brought to them will be turned away, no matter the size. With dedicated staff, as well as a local and internationally recognized volunteer programme for anyone interested in C.R.O.W, their impact in wildlife preservation and passing it on to the next generation is immeasurable.
